AMER0101	Advanced Studies in American Literature	4	Lecture	English	exam	Dr. Gabriella VÓÓ vo.gabriella@pte.hu	The theme of the course is American modernist poetry. It covers the poetic output of the first part of the twentieth century, concentrating on T. S. Eliot, Ezra Pound, Wallace Stevens, Hart Crane, Marianne Moore, Elizabeth Bishop, and Derek Wakot.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0102	Aspects of US Culture and Society	4	Lecture	English	two class papers and one short class presentation	Dr. Mónika FODOR fodor.monika@pte.hu	This American Studies course identifies and investigates elements of United States society from the aspects of its contemporary social and cultural history, including America's dominant popular cultures. It will concentrate on the late 20th/early 21st, post World War II era, though also with focused reference to the origins of the United States, in order to understand and define American identity. Readings will be assigned from three primary textbooks, along with articles made available, relevant to specific, weekly themes of the course.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0128	Theory and Practice of American Studies	4	Seminar	English	presentation, essay	Dr. Mónika FODOR fodor.monika@pte.hu	The aim of the course is to survey major American themes through the approaches offered by American studies as a way of mastering key tenets of the discipline. The course will ask students to read and view all assigned materials, primary and secondary, as well as to acquaint themselves with at least four of the suggested pieces, whether written or visual. Each student is to undertake at least one presentation of a topic of choice distributed in the first class, to participate in one individual consultation offered when tutor is on official leave, and to either submit a 2000-word paper to be discussed in a session, or to participate in an oral exam to be held in the exam period. Attendance is required as by university regulations, and participation in class counts towards one's grade.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0129	American Literature & Popular Culture 1	5	Seminar	English	mid-term and the end-term test	Dr. Norbert GYURIS gyuris.norbert@pte.hu	The course aims at giving a more detailed picture of popular culture and its connection to film based on a variety of areas of popular North American literature. The goal of the course is to facilitate the discussion of these topics via the interpretation of the assigned readings. The course includes the analysis and interpretation of cultural aspects of literary works, films, trends, genres and the related social phenomena. The course promotes critical thinking in both writing and speech.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0132	Literature and Identity 2	5	Seminar	English	class contribution, seminar paper	Dr. Gabriella VÓÓ vo.gabriella@pte.hu	The course explores literary works focusing on the cultures, identities, and experiences of selected ethnic groups within U.S. society. Students will employ close reading techniques to develop insights into rich, diverse perspectives and characteristic narratives. Moreover, findings from personal reading will be complemented by theoretical and conceptual frameworks of ethnicity and ethnic identification to challenge traditional notions of aesthetics. Thus, the theory and practice of the class will guide explorations of cultural authenticity, trauma, and identity.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0135	Classic Literary Criticism	5	Seminar	English	presentation & response essay	Dr. László SÁRI sari.laszlo@pte.hu	The course is aimed at surveying the development of American literary criticism from the 1930 to the present as one of the formative institutions of American literature. The seminar is designed as a reading seminar focusing on key theoretical texts as well as their historical embeddedness in the institution of criticism whether in or outside academia. Accordingly, those taking the course are required to read seminal works in the history of American literary and cultural criticism as well as chapters from the textbook, discuss them in class, and to present on some of the theoretical issues as encountered in the primary texts written in the field of literary studies for their presentation.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0136	New Media & Literature	6	Seminar	English	presentation & seminar paper	Dr. László SÁRI sari.laszlo@pte.hu	The course aims at giving a more detailed picture of the relationship of New Media and literary works. The structure, operating mechanism and the cultural impact of New Media will be discussed through the interpretation of literary pieces and their connection to New Media in general. The goal of the course is to facilitate the discussion of these topics via the interpretation of the assigned readings. The course includes the analysis and interpretation of cultural aspects of literary works, trends, genres related to New Media. The course promotes critical thinking in both writing and speech.	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
AMER0137	American Political Institutions	4	Lecture	English	exam	Dr. Mónika FODOR fodor.monika@pte.hu	The lecture is an introduction to the American political system and laws. It is based on the lecture US Politics and Culture and its theoretical and methodological considerations. At a practical level, the course examines the concepts, structure, forms of government, institutional and organizational units, organization and especially constitutional foundations of American political institutions. The aim of the course is to acquire a sensitive, critical thinking and analytical approach to American political issues, as well as the ability to debate, as well as to put the examined issues arising in contemporary American politics into a historical perspective through source analysis. Students are expected to stay up-to-date on current American political events by regularly reading at least one online news source (see media chart for list of most reliable news sources).	MA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
ANGA0101	Introduction to Intercultural Communication	2	Lecture	English	written exam	Dr. Judit DOMBI dombi.judit@pte.hu	The subject area gives a theoretical and practical introduction to intercultural communication. Discussed are the bases of culture and cultural differences, language differences and their relationship with culture, the characteristics of verbal and non-verbal communication, linguistic and pragmatic aspects of communication. It introduces students to the realization of everyday written and oral forms of intercultural communication, to the characteristics of verbal and non-verbal communication in the private and public spheres and in the workplace, to the use of communicational and compensational strategies, to the difficulties and characteristics of talking to foreigners, and the phenomena experienced during the use of a foreign language in intercultural situations.	BA	Department of English Linguistics
ANGA0110	The Language of Literary and Cultural Studies	2	Seminar	English	written assignments	Dr. Zsuzsa CSIKAI csikai.zsuzsa@pte.hu	The aim of the course is to introduce first-year BA students to the major topics and terminology of research in literature and cultural studies through the study of various primary and secondary texts from different areas of the fields. The course intends to develop and improve students' vocabulary, reading comprehension, academic writing and oral presentation skills in the fields of literature and cultural studies.	BA	Department of English Literatures and Cultures
ANGA0115	English Phonetics and Phonology	3	Lecture	English	written exam	Dr. Tamás FEKETE fekete.tamas@pte.hu	This lecture course provides a basic introduction to English phonetics and phonology. Theoretical issues of speech sound production, classification of consonants and vowels, phonotactics and major types of sound changes will be discussed in detail. A brief overview of contemporary changes in Received Pronunciation is also included in the topics. The course requires understanding and active use of the International Phonetic Alphabet, transcription exercises will be regularly provided.	BA	Department of English Linguistics
ANGA0116	English Morphology	3	Lecture	English	written exam	Dr. Tamás FEKETE fekete.tamas@pte.hu	The aim of this lecture course is to provide a general survey of characteristics and structure of English words. Attention will be devoted to the discussion of inflectional and derivational morphology, as well as the different types of affixes and affixation processes. Methods of word-formation without affixation will also be discussed. In the second half of the course, the notions of productivity and lexicalization will be brought under scrutiny from a historical perspective. The course will conclude with a discussion of the relationship between social factors and morphology.	BA	Department of English Linguistics
ANGA0125	British Literature and Culture II Lecture	3	Lecture	English	exam	Dr. Gabriella HARTVIG hurvig.gabriella@pte.hu	The lecture course offers an overview of English literature and culture from the Victorian era to the 1970s. ESZBA0102	Introduction to Art History	3	Lecture	English	Active participation and written examination	Dr. Adrienne GÁLOSI galoasi.adrienne@pze.hu	The course provides introduction to the most important concepts, methods and fields of study in the field of art history: the emergence of art history as an autonomous discipline, its hierarchy, the concept of style, and stylistic periods, the interrelationship of artistic disciplines, and the connections among branches of art; the concept of genre, source criticism, morphology, techniques of attribution, iconography, iconology. In many places it offers points of contact and insights into the history of culture and ideas, philosophy or literature. The course explores the field of art history as a discipline - its scope, structure, methods, the relationship between art history, and aesthetics, and presents art history as an interpretative discipline. Through famous interpretations of famous artworks, the art historical meaning of basic terms such as allegory, attribute, emblem, frame, personification, genre, symbol, type will be explored.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
ESZBA0206	Early Medieval and Byzantine Art	4	Lecture	English	Attendance, sub-tasks, final written test	Dr. György HEIDL heidl.gyorgy@pze.hu	A series of lectures on the emergence of Western and Eastern Christian visual art, its main characteristics, and most important works. Introduction to the outstanding works of early Christian and Byzantine architecture, painting, mosaic, and decorative arts with special focus on the relevant art historical and aesthetic terminology.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
ESZBA0208	Iconography/Iconology	4	Lecture	English	Term paper and final written test	Dr. Adrienne GÁLOSI galoasi.adrienne@pze.hu	The course will investigate how iconography has been formulated and practiced by some of the leading figures in art history since the late nineteenth century. It will begin with an historical account of the so-called Hamburg School of art history, Aby Warburg and Erwin Panofsky. Students will be introduced to historical instances of image-text relations, they will study the application of iconographic methodology to Classical, and (early) modern Christian images, and will be given considerations of the applicability of iconography in the study of contemporary art. Students will look into case studies comparing iconographic interpretations of individual artworks by various scholars.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
ESZBA0209	Understanding the Built Environment	4	Seminar	English	Written examination	Dr. Adrienne GÁLOSI galoasi.adrienne@pze.hu	The lectures in this course will introduce you to the theoretical, practical, ethical and aesthetic foundations of architecture, with particular emphasis on aspects of function, place, space and techniques and their interplay. Architecture embodies the deepest social values of a culture and expresses them in material and aesthetic form. The course seeks to understand architecture as both a cultural practice and expression and a technical achievement. The main historical, typological and technological terms will be explained, illustrated with examples from contemporary and historical European culture, to explain the basic elements of architecture and the interrelationships between them. It demonstrates the complex relationship of architecture with its social and historical context, its audience and its users. We will learn about the representational power of architecture and how it can create collective meaning and memory. The course will review the central themes of 20th century architectural theory.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
ESZBA0213	Art of the 19th Century – Modernism	4	Seminar	English	Active participation and term paper	Dr. Balazs GÖRÖL gorol.balazs@pze.hu	The lecture discusses the developments in the 19th century Hungarian art history related to the classicist and romantic styles, as well as to historicism and academism at the end of the century. It presents the formation of the independent art institutional system in Hungary during the 19th century. It deals with the arrival and unfolding of classicism in castle architecture, ecclesiastical and civil architecture, and then with the variants of the deinstitutionalization of classicism and the problem of the search for national style. It provides an overview of the beginnings of national painting and painting in the first half of the century. It discusses the masters of portrait, genre, landscape painting, historical graphics and painting from Hungarian romanticism through historicism to the academism of the end of the century.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
ESZBA0214	20th Century Art	4	Seminar	English	Two mid-term tests and a final exam	Dr. Adrienne GÁLOSI galoasi.adrienne@pze.hu	The course will cover the arts from the 20th century to contemporary art. From the avant-garde to conceptualism, it surveys the most important artists and works of painting, sculpture and new genres, while also providing an overview of the most important issues and artists in the architecture of the century. The course introduces you to the trends in modern art and the socio-intellectual changes that have underpinned them, and seeks to illustrate the process by which art has become a problem in and for itself. Starting from late symbolism, the course looks at the often conflicting aspirations of the avant-garde movements and the most significant individual artistic achievements, and seeks to shed light on the process by which the traditional concept of art was challenged and the possibilities of its formal, material, media and thematic expression changed. In the context of post-1945 art, the main themes are performativity, the incorporation of consumer culture into art, institutional critique and the extreme conceptualisation of art. In addition to architecture, painting and sculpture, the course also seeks to discuss the most significant works of emerging new genres and new media.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
ESZBA0215	History of Hungarian Art	4	Seminar	English	Active participation and written examination	Dr. Péter CSÖNGI csongipeter@pze.hu	The course provides a basic overview of the history of Hungarian art as it is embedded in the changing European historical stylistic periods, but also pays attention to the particular Middle-European and Hungarian tendencies. The course guides the students through the art history by focusing on the cultural sites of Pécs. Classes in local museums and galleries that contain artworks and architecture from the Roman Age to the present day are included. The course also covers the history of the Republic, uncovering histories of 1500 years. The rich heritage of Pécs provides opportunities – from Early Christian cemetery through the cathedral from the Middle Ages and the Zsolnay ceramics of the Art Nouveau to Bauhaus architects – to follow art history up to the contemporary scene.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies
FILMA0101	Introduction to Film Studies	4	Lecture	English	Written examination	Dr. Tamás CSÖNGE csongetamas@pze.hu	The purpose of this course is to introduce students to the fundamental characteristics of film as an audiovisual medium and artform. It discusses the diverse forms of various professional discourses about film, including aspects of film history, film theory, and film criticism. The focus is on film as a form of cultural communication, therefore technical, aesthetic and contextual aspects are given equal importance in the curriculum. In addition to the analysis of the formal-textual elements of the medium (cinematography, editing, sound, mise-en-scène, acting), its rhetorical figures, genres, narrative modes, cognitive and visceral effects, emphasis is also placed on the ideological charge, social and cultural context of each work. By mastering subject knowledge, the basics of critical thinking and the academic language, students will be able to develop consistent and compelling film interpretations.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies
FILMA0107	Introduction to Film Analysis	5	Lecture	English	Written examination	Dr. Csaba ANDRÁS andrascsaba@pze.hu	The aim of the film analysis subject group is to develop the interpretational competencies of students. The aim of the seminar is to familiarize the students with the conceptual apparatus used in film analysis, the presentation of a wide spectrum of interpretational methods, and the broadening of the students' interpretive perspectives. In presenting the methods of art analysis, special emphasis is placed on the formal and discursive peculiarities of film, the meaning-making role of the elements that constitute film language, the social/historical context of interpretive traditions, and the interpretive practices of other disciplines in contact with film studies. Film analysis during the seminar explores the cognitive and emotional mechanisms of the case studies, highlights the connection of the analyzed films to aesthetic canons, point out the way in which the philosophies, systems of ideas and ideologies present in the films prevail, and deepen our understanding of the creative process.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies
FILMA0108	Classical and Modern Film Theories	4	Lecture	English	Term paper	Péter Miklós LICHTER lichterpeter@pze.hu	The course examines the ways in which cinema has been thought about, defined and studied. Students become acquainted with the most important basic concepts and debates in film aesthetics (film as language, the relationship between film and reality, montage, modernism/ mass culture debate, the relationship between film history and style), various schools of film theory (film semantics, psychoanalytic theories, sem theory, cognitive theories, cultural approaches) and the most important texts of theorists (Rudolf Arnheim, Jean Epstein, Sergej Eisenstein, Siegfried Kracauer, Béla Balázs, André Bazin, Walter Benjamin, Jean Mitry, Vsevolod Pudovkin, Christian Metz, Roland Barthes, Stephen Heath, Laura Mulvey, Noël Burch). Students will be able to place theoretical texts in a historical and cultural context and take a critical approach.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies
FILMA0109	Filmnarratology	4	Seminar	English	Written examination	Dr. Tamás CSÖNGE csongetamas@pze.hu	The course introduces students to the basic concepts, methodology, current problems and debates of film narratology. The course examines the appearance of narrative elements and structures in cinematic form, and how the language- and text-centered categories of the auxiliary science of classical narrative theory (narration, story, point of view, space, time) can be applied in a film theoretical discourse, and what new analytical aspects and models are necessitated by medial, structural, and contextual differences. Students will become familiar with the major schools and approaches to narrative theory and will be able to recognize, systematize and interpret a variety of narrative techniques and to approach the relationship between film and narration in a problem-sensitive and nuanced way.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies
FILMA0110	Film History 1.	4	Lecture	English	Written examination	Dr. Csaba ANDRÁS andrascsaba@pze.hu	Through the lectures students learn about the first thirty years of film history, from the development of film technology to the first years of the introduction of film sound. During the semester, the most important trends of the silent film era will be discussed: the period of "the cinema of attraction", the avant-garde traditions (dadaist, expressionist, surrealist, constructivist tendencies), the early mass cinema, the "city symphony" film form, the first propaganda films, and the main directions of film criticism and theory between the two world wars. Although the primary focus of the course is the European filmmaking and the avant-garde, students will also become familiar with the dominant, fictional filmmaking of the era, as well as the documentaries of the period. The aim of the course is to see these phenomena in the context and as a part of more general systems of cultural and social relations. By completing the course, students will be able to understand the historical system and context of the silent film era.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies
FILMA0115	Film History 3	4	Lecture	English	written or oral examination	Dr. Tamás CSÖNGE csongetamas@pze.hu	The course introduces students to the third major period in film history from the 1950s to the 1970s, focusing on modern European art film emerging from the theoretical-conceptual idea of film authorship (auteur theory) and juxtaposing it with major developments in American cinema. Students will gain knowledge of the trends and peculiarities of cinematic modernism, its relationship to classical narrative, the main features of national new waves, and will be able to see the relationship of films of the era to previous formal and narrative conventions. The works of Alfred Hitchcock, Stanley Kubrick, Roman Polanski, Jean-Luc Godard, François Truffaut, Alain Resnais, Federico Fellini, Michelangelo Antonioni, Luis Buñuel, Ingmar Bergman and Andrej Tarkovskij are featured in the material.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies
FILMA0116	History of Hungarian Cinema	4	Lecture	English	Active participation and written examination	Dr. Csaba ANDRÁS andrascsaba@pze.hu	The course introduces students to the most important eras, styles, genres, creators and films of Hungarian film history. The main topics of the course include the period of silent films, the transition to sound film, the comedies and melodramas of the thirties and forties, films of coalition times, the Rákos and Kádár eras, the Hungarian cinematic modernism, and an overview of the period of regime change and the present day. The course focuses on the portraits of the greatest Hungarian directors, drawn from an aesthetic point of view. The course also pays attention both to the presentation of the formal peculiarities of Hungarian film art and to the outline of the institutional conditions of film production. Within the course, students will gain a comprehensive knowledge of film history and will be able to understand and interpret the trends, creators, films and the context of the Hungarian film.	BA	Department of Film and Visual Studies

FILMA0117	Film Analysis 2	5	Seminar	English	essays	Péter Miklós LICHTER lichter.miklos@pte.hu	The aim of the film analysis subject group is to develop the interpretational competencies of students. The aim of the seminar is to familiarize the students with the conceptual apparatus used in film analysis, the presentation of a wide spectrum of interpretational methods, and the broadening of the students' interpretive perspectives. In presenting the methods of art analysis, special emphasis is placed on the formal and discursive peculiarities of film, the meaning-making role of the elements that constitute film language, the social/historical context of interpretive traditions, and the interpretive practices of other disciplines in contact with film studies. Film analyses during the seminar explore the cognitive and emotional mechanisms of the case studies, highlight the connection of the analyzed films to aesthetic canons, point out the way in which the philosophies, systems of ideas and ideologies present in the films prevail, and deepen our understanding of the creative process. FILOA0101	Introduction to Philosophy	4	Lecture	English	written examination	Dr. László KOCSIS kocsis.laszlo@pte.hu	The knowledge offered in this subject is intended, on the one hand, to convey and mobilise the basic apparatus of logical and philosophical thinking and, on the other, to help the students to find their way around amongst the most important topics in philosophy. In achieving this end, we'll not discuss philosophical theories in a chronological order, but organise them around problems and paradoxes. The paradoxes also draw their attention to the inaccuracies and contradictions in our everyday beliefs and philosophical theories, and by doing that we'll have opportunities to present and analyse the conflicting and contradictory philosophical theories in details. The paradoxes around which the course organises the philosophical theories come from different areas of philosophy, such as metaphysics (Zeno's paradoxes, the problem of causality), theology (the stone paradox), logic and epistemology (the paradox of the liar), philosophy of mind (AI), philosophy of science (the confirmation paradox), political philosophy and morality (the paradox of the theory of democracy, the trolley-problem), philosophy of art (the problem of artworks).	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0102	Introduction to Ethics	4	Lecture	English	Active participation and written examination	Dr. Zsófia BÉCSI besci.zsolt@pte.hu	Ethics is a philosophical discipline. Its theme is morality. The subject provides an introduction to the interpretation of basic concepts of ethics by getting to know the eras and significant authors of the history of ethics. The subject provides an introduction to the works of the most significant authors of ethics, to the study of their basic concepts, and to the interaction of different trends and schools. The subject is structured around the problem of ethical authors of European cultural history as well as thinkers from the United States. In addition to getting to know the basic literature, we also provide an opportunity to learn research methods and analytical aspect. For all this, we prepare case studies and draw on literary and film examples.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0103	Introduction to Social Theory	3	Lecture	English	Active participation and oral examination	Dr. Zsolt BAGI bagi.zsolt@pte.hu	The aim of this course is to demonstrate the interconnection between modern philosophy and theory of the society in an era when philosophy gained societal significance and society became a philosophical concept. Possible subjects are the following: 1. The role of philosophy in creating the concept of society in the 17th and 18th century. 2. The birth of the philosophy of inter-subjectivity in Hegel. 3. The philosophy as critique of the society in Feuerbach and Marx. 4. Phenomenological philosophies of the society. 5. The theory of justice. 6. The Frankfurt School. 7. The Budapest School. 8. Post-structuralism. The aim of the course is to enable the students to critically analyse societal problems and to understand the social impact of philosophy. They acquire knowledge on the fundamental concepts of the discipline, they will be able to analyze the problems in a wide-historical, cultural, social context.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0206	The Legacy of the Ancient World for the Modern West	5	Seminar	English	Active participation, written examination	Dr. Veronika KULIN kulin.veronika@pte.hu	The course offers a general introduction to ancient Greek and Roman culture and its impact on modern Western civilization. Its focus is twofold. On the one hand, it aims to provide students with an elementary understanding of Latin and Greek: the alphabet, words, names, expressions and proverbs of Greek and Latin origin; key grammatical concepts; fundamentals of historical linguistics (related languages, ancient Greek dialects, historical phases and types of Latin); general characteristics of Greek and Latin, declension, system of tenses. On the other hand, the course explores classical cultures: history of writing, textual transmission; Greek and Roman education; the dialogue between Greek and Roman cultures; mythology; Greek and Latin Bible and ecclesiastical Latin; Latin literature in the age of humanism and reformation; Latin in Hungary from the Middle Ages up to the present. In order to acquire language skills and basic knowledge of classical culture, students read simple Latin and Greek texts and observe ancient artefacts. They are also expected to do exercises challenging their creativity and to do simple research on their own with the help of recommended literature as well as online sources.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0207	Ancient Philosophy	6	Lecture	English	Written or oral examination	Prof. Dr. Robert SOMOS somos.robert@pte.hu	The principal task of the course is to show the main figures of the antique philosophy, the schools and the most important philosophical problems treated by the thinkers. The course presents the formation of the philosophical world-view and the relation between the philosophy and mythical view of reality. It discusses the ion beginning with Thales – and west branches of presocratic philosophy, Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Hellenistic schools, that is, Stoic, Epicurean and Sceptic schools' teachings, the main figures of the philosophical tradition during the Roman Empire, with special emphasis on Platonic and Patristic authors. The course investigates the problems of the sources, and wants to give an introduction into the reading and interpreting philosophical texts. It discusses the connections between philosophy and other fields of intellectual culture. The course establishes the competence of the students in the discipline of history of philosophy.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0208	Medieval and Early Modern Philosophy	4	Lecture	English	oral exam or essay	Dr. Zsolt BAGI bagi.zsolt@pte.hu	The course examines the fundamental thoughts of the philosophy of middle ages and their prolonged existence in the early modern philosophy. It provides introduction to the history of the philosophy of the 17th century. It discusses the works of the philosophers of scholasticism, modern skepticism, early modern rationalism and empiricism. It offers insight to the main problems and concept of the period by the way of systematic textual analysis. The discussed authors may be: St. Anselm, St. Thomas of Aquinas, Ockham, Bacon, Descartes, Hobbes, Spinoza, Leibniz, Locke.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0209	The Beginning of Modern Philosophy and Its Systems	4	Lecture	English	oral exam or essay	Dr. Zsolt BAGI bagi.zsolt@pte.hu	The course examines genesis of the worldview of modernity and its scientific, political and epistemological foundations. Possible subjects: The concept of the "infinite universe" in Galilei and Descartes. The "space" in Newton and Leibniz. The destruction of the hierarchical worldview in Descartes' epistemology, Hobbes' political philosophy and Pascal's philosophy and theology. The birth of the modern sciences. Cartesian and Baconian view on the science. Empiricism and rationalism in early modern philosophy.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0215	Philosophy of History and Religion	4	Seminar	English	Active participation and term paper	Dr. Zsolt BAGI bagi.zsolt@pte.hu	An argument for dealing with philosophy of history and religion in a parallel way can be drawn from the fact that a systematic reflection on history was developed in the European traditions in a religious context, and philosophy of history had originally a religious motive in Europe. The course shows the historical relation of historical and religious thought, and also highlights the contemporary skepticism related to this connection. The course provides an introduction to the theoretical questions of a reflection on history, to the thought of the major exponents of the field (from Augustine to Karl Löwith), and to the contemporary concepts of an interpretation of history outside the religious framework (including the notions of the impossibility of a philosophy of history). Students should be able to identify the religious notions inherent in the interpretation of history, and to classify contemporary paths in the philosophy of history.	BA	Department of Philosophy
FILOA0216	Philosophy of Science and Epistemology	4	Seminar	English	two written test	Dr. László KOCSIS kocsis.laszlo@pte.hu	Epistemology and philosophy of science are closely related philosophical disciplines. Generally speaking, in epistemology, we try to provide a theory of knowledge, and, in philosophy of science, we try to elucidate a theory of scientific knowledge. The course is divided into two main parts. In the first part we will be concerned with the best attempts to define the concept of knowledge. However, it seems that for a clear definition of the concept of knowledge firstly we have to clarify the concept of truth and justification, but the questions "What is truth?" and "What is justification?" cannot be answered easily. In the second part of the course, we will discuss the most fundamental questions of philosophy of science, like "What makes a theory scientific?", "What is the special nature of scientific knowledge and how can we get it?", "What is the nature of scientific explanations?", "What are the laws of nature?", "How does science progress?", and "What is the relationship between science and philosophy?". The main aim of this course is to offer a conceptual toolbox to study the most fundamental problems in epistemology and philosophy of science, to discuss the arguments for and against some epistemological theories, and to discuss the philosophical implications of scientific theories.	BA	Department of Philosophy
KLAF0101	Introduction to the Ancient Greek and Roman World	3	Lecture	English	Active presence, written examination	Dr. Szilvia LAKATOS lakatos.szilvia@pte.hu	The legacy of Greece and Rome. The course offers a general introduction to ancient Greek and Roman culture and its impact on modern Western civilization. Its focus is twofold. FILOA0214	Philosophy of the Arts	4	Seminar	English	Written examination	Dr. Adrienne GALOSI galosi.adrienne@pte.hu	This lecture aims to present the most fundamental texts in the thinking about art, focusing on the emergence of aesthetics as a discipline in its own right. Thus, we will discuss Aristotle's concept, followed by medieval ideas of the beautiful, and then the modern debate on taste and aesthetic judgment. The course is usually associated with Baumgarten's seminal work. After a brief introduction to this, we will discuss Kantian, Romantic and Hegelian aesthetics, and then briefly review the main objections to the so-called system aesthetics.	BA	Department of Aesthetics and Cultural Studies

KOMT1034	Ethical Challenges in Digital Journalism	4	Practice	English	Active participation in the discussions Referate (presentation); Final article connected to the topic of the presentations	Dr. Annamária TORBÓ torbo.annamaria@pte.hu	The overall objective of the course is that students gain knowledge about the new ethical problems linked with the digital media and journalism environment and increasing sensibility of the journalism students regarding the digital ethical challenges. The students learn the special ethical issues of the digital media, and they get examples on handling these challenges. They will become more aware of how digital technology and increased two-way engagement with audiences are changing the nature of journalistic ethical decision-making and challenging it in new ways. The significance of the ethical problems is enlightened by their technical and social background. The whole seminar is based on the analysis of relevant ethical cases. The course is based on e-learning materials developed for each topic. Beyond the individual learning, the students should take actively part the lessons. They elaborate specific issues as a referate, and discuss the connecting problems.	BA	Institute of Social and Media Studies
KOMTA0103	Interpersonal Communication	4	Lecture	English	Oral or written exam	Dr. Tamás PÓLYA polya.tamas@pte.hu	In this module, we survey a selection of essential theories of interpersonal (i.e. face-to-face, F2F) communication and linguistic pragmatics. In reviewing the theories, we evaluate them on the merits of their intellectual depth, social scientific insight, and, above all, practical applicability. On the course, we investigate how meaning is created and grasped by speakers and hearers, what kinds of social and cultural roles and positions these participants take, and how uncertainty is a constitutive, rather than accidental, feature of human interaction. We also lay a special emphasis on the interplay of biological and cultural aspects of communication and the workings of emotional and cognitive mechanisms involved in verbal interpretative processes and human interaction in general.	BA	Institute of Social and Media Studies
KOMTA0104	Introduction to Cultural Anthropology	4	Lecture	English	mid-term test, final test	Dr. Tibor MESTER, mester.tibor@pte.hu	This series of lectures introduces students to key concepts, methods, and theoretical debates of sociocultural anthropology. The first section of the course examines the development of anthropology as a discipline and its central methodology of participant observation; displays the culture concept in cross-cultural analyses and comparisons in the fields of religion, economy and kinship. The second section explores different topics (gender, ritual processes, ethnicity and nation making, consumption and subcultures) in traditional and complex societies; gives an overview of the issues of ethnographic representation, and assesses the effects of the transnational processes on local, regional and global culture, and finally, social media.	BA	Institute of Social and Media Studies
KOMTA0106	Introduction to Empirical Social Research	4	Lecture	English	Written examination	Márton BAGYURA bagyura.marton@pte.hu	The aim of the course is to introduce students to the core concepts, principles, and methods of empirical social research. Students will explore the nature of scientific inquiry in the social sciences, the role of theory and paradigms, and the ethical considerations involved in conducting research. The course examines how research projects are designed, from defining their purpose to moving from concepts to measurable variables, and compares the strengths and limitations of qualitative and quantitative approaches. Attention will also be given to conducting research in digital environments (e-research) and to effectively presenting and writing up research findings in line with academic standards. KOMTA0110	Introduction to Media Studies	4	Lecture	English	Regular attendance of the lectures, written exam at the end of the term	Dr. Ádám GULD, guld.adam@pte.hu	This course intends to give an overall view of the theoretical frameworks to media studies. The lecture is organized around three major didactic issues that follow the evolution and concepts of mass communication through the genre of media to its reception. The first block introduces the historical development of mass communications, its important concepts and models from the perspective of media theory and social theory. The second unit introduces the audience to the social and formal issues of media content, focusing on media genres. Finally, during the reception, we review the traditions and experiences of audience theory and research, as well as the characteristics of audience formation, with a particular focus on fan cultures. KOMTA0126	Levels and Contexts of Communication I.	4	Seminar	English	individual presentations (40%) final essay (40%) class participation and discussion (20%)	Dr. Rita GLÁZER, glazer.rita@pte.hu	In order to familiarise students with advanced contemporary media theories, this module provides an overview of the popular concept of participatory culture. Considering the changing roles of media users in the digital era, participatory culture theory focuses on the ways private persons (amateurs) participate in producing media content. During the course, students gain knowledge about the history of the concept from its early explanations through its widespread use to the most recent criticisms it received as well as about the fundamental notions, interests, and methods of participatory culture research.	BA	Institute of Social and Media Studies
KOMTA0129	The Social History of Communication	4	Lecture	English	Active participation; Referate; Final essay	Dr. Gyula MAKSA maksu.gyula@pte.hu	The overall objective of the course is that students acquire knowledge about the basic problems and concepts of media history and social history of communication, and increasing sensibility of the students regarding the historiography and the historical aspects of media. PONTA0106	Theories of International Relations	3	Lecture	English	end-term test, written exam	Dr Péter KACZIBA kacziba.peter@pte.hu	This course is designed to provide comprehensive knowledge on the field of theories of International Relations. It will introduce students to the most important contending theories such as liberalism and neo-institutional liberalism, realism and neorealism, radical perspectives, and postmodern approaches. It will describe how these different approaches explain the basic concepts of international relations, how they define the international system; state and nation; or the role of individuals. Among these topics, it will outline how violent conflicts and wars evolve, how we define peace, and how we can use theories in practice.	MA	Department of Political Science and International Studies
PONTA0107	Geopolitics	2	Lecture	English	three one-pagers, end-term test	Dr. István TARRÓSV tarrasy.ivan@pte.hu	The course aims at providing an overview of geopolitical thought from its classical to its post-modern theories. Critical Geopolitics will be a major terrain of investigation, but separate attention will be devoted to the Cold War and how the international system has been transforming into a more multipolar setting since the collapse of the Soviet Union. While states and the state system will be under investigation, students will have the chance to look into non-state actors and the new dynamics of entities of the semi-periphery. Certain rivalries between states will be exposed as intriguing case studies for geopolitical considerations. Topics will embrace highly captivating issues including popular geopolitics, the geopolitics of pandemics, the geopolitics of deep oceans, or the geopolitics of space exploration. PONTA0110	Globalisation, Mondialisation	4	Lecture	English	Written Exam	Dr. Szabolcs DIÓSI diosi.szabolcs@qis.pte.hu	In the age of globalisation, it is essential to pay close attention to the following key domains: society, economy, ecology, culture and identity. In this course through the analysis of the historical dynamics of globalism, we will seek to answer the following questions: How do national, ethnic, religious and personal identities change in the process of globalisation? How has global free trade and the neoliberal economic model affected the rights and freedoms of many in developing countries? What are the adverse effects of globalisation processes on our environment? What new global challenges can be identified in relation of the rapidly evolving technological revolution? The course will also attempt to provide an overview of the newly emerging anti-globalist movements.	MA	Department of Political Science and International Studies
PONTA0113	Geography of Elections	4	Lecture	English	reflection paper and final exam	Dr. Zoltán VÖRÖS voros.zoltan@pte.hu	The course will focus on the political geography of elections, dealing with the politics of the electoral process. We will examine how elections contribute to the development and use of power and legitimacy in political systems. Most attention will be given to the analysis of the electoral systems, how they influence voters' choices.	MA	Department of Political Science and International Studies
PONTA0115	Regional Studies	3	Lecture	English	oral exam	Dr. Máté DEÁK deak.mate@pte.hu	With the change of the regime Hungary needed to face two challenges: creating a new political, economic and social structure in the country found, and at the same time, finding its place and role in a new international and security environment. This situation led to the acceptance of the new priorities of Hungarian security and military policy. Today, the Hungarian national army operates within the framework of a new type of military alliance, and it basically copes with the professional army-model, based on the principles of volunteering. The aim of the course is to introduce the security policy of Hungary in the last two decades, to examine the institutions involved in national security policy (government, parliament, army), to examine the institutional framework of civil control over the army, the legal environment, the results and the failures in the field of army modernization. The examination of the security and military policies of the governments and parties since the change of the regime is also an essential part of the course. PONTA0201	The European Paradigm Since the Ancient Times until the Present Day	3	Lecture	English	oral exam	Dr. Erich Zoltán BRETTNER zoltan.bretter@gmail.com	The idea of Europe is a unified ideality in so far as we perceive it as an abstract entity. Therefore is very important to understand, that the idea of Europe is an empirical construct, artefact, and its inner tensions are those that define it. Instead of having a descriptive, simplifying, partition approach, the student should seek a more sophisticated description of the idea	MA	Department of Political Science and International Studies
PONTA0204	The EU in International Affairs	3	Lecture	English	formative assessment and exam	Dr. Zoltán VÖRÖS voros.zoltan@pte.hu	The precise and real nature of the European Union (EU) has long been a question in international affairs. It is difficult to understand, how to deal and cooperate with an actor, which is neither a traditional state nor an intergovernmental international organization. While the EU has significant decision-making authority in certain policy areas, it lacks influence in others. This mix of competencies in external relations can confuse non-members and strain relations among EU member states and the Union's supranational institutions. The course investigates the complexities of the EU's role and authority in international affairs and its relations with peripheries and other actors. PONTA0209	Central European Political Structures	3	Lecture	English	oral exam presentation	Dr. Andrea GÁL ZOLTÁNNÉ SCHMIDT szmidt.andrea@pte.hu	This course deal with the Central and Eastern European region, examines its geographical, political, historical aspects, while also deals with the current regional integration models such as Visegrad Group, CEFTA, Slavkov Trnava, etc.	MA	Department of Political Science and International Studies
PONTA0302	Latin America from the Cold War up to the Present	2	Lecture	English	oral exam	Dr. Máté DEÁK deak.mate@pte.hu	As Latin America continues to modernize, the region is becoming increasingly more important to the World and to the United States, even if Washington hasn't been recognizing it. Indeed, political, social, economic, and cultural ties are broadening and deepening. Especially in the Mexico-U.S. border states and in the region's largest cities, the hemispheric effects of globalization have resulted in the simultaneous "Latinamericanization" of the United States and "Americanization" of Latin America. However, Latin America as a region remains poorly understood to many citizens in the Western Hemisphere—even to many Latin Americans themselves—and few theories have been able to adequately explain many recent political developments. Latin America is vast and varied, and it would be impossible to become an expert on each and every country. In fact, it is almost ridiculous to attempt to cover nearly the entire Western Hemisphere in a single semester. Nonetheless, this course will examine various dimensions of politics across the region after the Cold War with an emphasis on contemporary political problems and general political, social, and economic trends and movements. Comparison will be made between countries regarding social stratification patterns, governmental structures, socioeconomic and political development, leadership styles, and political cultures. Moreover,	MA	Department of Political Science and International Studies

PSZI0713	Evolutionary Psychology I.	3	Lecture	English	exam	Dr. Ádám PUTZ putz.adam@pte.hu	The aim of this course is to introduce first year psychology students to the basic concepts of evolutionary psychology and to provide an overview about the topics regarding the evolution of the human mind and culture, cooperation and aggression. After a short historical introduction and clarification of Darwin's basic concepts, we turn our attention to the similarities and differences regarding the cognitive capacities of primates and humans. Then we elaborate on how emotions influence our "rational" thinking and what adaptive purposes do they serve in our everyday lives. We also discuss the forces behind the evolution of human languages and culture. In the second half of the semester we review theories about group formation, conformity and the function of social norms. Then we discuss the mechanisms of kin selection, reciprocal altruism and indiscriminate altruism. Finally, we talk about theories regarding the purpose of aggression and rivalry among people while attempting to answer the age-old debate whether aggression is a learnt behaviour or something that we are born with? PSZI0759	Encouraging and Integrating Communication Skills: Practical Techniques	3	Seminar	English	presentation	Norbert SZENTIVÁNYI norbyrd@gmail.com	The main objective of the course is to improve students' communication skills in English. Various classroom activities allow students to use oral communication skills as a way of responding to and analysing written and audio texts, generating ideas for writing, and exploring psychology-related issues and topics. A further aim is to help students become better critical thinkers, writers and readers as well.	BA	Institute of Psychology
PSZI0781	Cognitive Psychology II.	4	Lecture	English	exam	Dr. András ZSIDÓ zsidu.andras@pte.hu	The aim of this course is an empirical and theoretical examination of the processes of attention, memory and learning. We will cover the basic mental processes of attention. You will get an insight in both the early and modern theories and methods. For memory the focus will be mostly on working memory, organisation of concepts in long term memory, declarative and nondeclarative memory and false memories. We will also touch on learning starting from classical and operant conditioning, insight learning through social learning.	BA	Institute of Psychology
PSZI0783	Cognitive Psychology III.	4	Lecture	English	exam	Dr. Szabolcs KISS kiss.szabolcs@pte.hu	The primary goal of the course is to give an overview of the current research on thinking and reasoning. At the beginning, we cover the most important logical inferences. Then the topic of causal learning and analogical processes will be covered. Following this, we will discuss the different heuristics and the cognitive mechanisms of problem solving. Then the relationship between language and thinking will be examined. After this, we will cover the cultural differences within thinking and reasoning. Then the nature of scientific thinking and rationality will be discussed. The course will close with the topic of understanding non-logical inferences.	BA	Institute of Psychology

OLAS0305	Fundamentals of Literary and Cultural Studies 1 / Introduzione agli studi letterari 1	2	Lecture	Italian	oral exam	Dr. Beáta DIMÁK-TOMBI, tombi.beata@pte.hu	Il corso di carattere introduttivo si concentra sull'approfondimento delle tematiche dell'arte italiana attraverso lo studio delle diverse correnti artistiche. Permette di acquisire conoscenze nel campo delle arti visive, dall'età medievale fino all'età contemporanea, fornendo una visione completa dell'evoluzione artistica. Il percorso teorico si sviluppa attraverso un approccio interpretativo e analitico delle opere principali, stimolando una comprensione critica delle tecniche e dei linguaggi artistici. Le lezioni mirano a potenziare le competenze analitiche e interpretative, affinando la capacità di leggere e contestualizzare le opere d'arte. Particolare attenzione sarà dedicata alla comprensione delle dinamiche storiche e culturali che hanno influenzato la produzione artistica. Il corso promuove inoltre lo sviluppo di competenze comunicative e critiche, incoraggiando il confronto e il dibattito tra gli studenti. In questo modo, i partecipanti acquisiranno strumenti utili per interpretare in modo autonomo e consapevole il patrimonio artistico italiano.
