GENERAL DESCRIPTION

Legal studies have always been an important component of academic programmes at the University of Pécs. In fact, university education in Pécs started in 1367 with the teaching of canon law. In the period between 1950-1971 the Faculty of Law was the only faculty that secured the continuity of the University after World War II. In 2008 the Faculty celebrated the 85th anniversary of the modern law school in Pécs. The Faculty has long-standing international relations, e. g. with the universities of Marburg, Bayreuth, Vienna, Graz, InHolland University in the Netherlands and the London Southbank University.

The Faculty has established co-operative relations with law faculties in countries in our wider region (e.g. Cluj-Napoca, Novi Sad, Rijeka, and Wrocław) which involve teacher and student mobility and short study visits. The successful CEEPUS (Central European Exchange Programme for University Studies) applications of the Faculty in the academic years of 2005/2006 and 2008/2009 lead to setting up the first CEEPUS network operating in the area of law in Central Eastern Europe. In the first case, the objective was to study the relationship between three legal systems: international law, European Union law and domestic laws; in the second case the objective is to study the situation of minorities in the Central European region. This co-operation resulted in special forms of joint education and training programmes such as the joint master's degree programme in Cluj-Napoca, an experimental tandem-seminar launched in the framework of BA-level education and various summer universities.

The Faculty, together with the Faculty of Law of the Babes-Bolyai University of Cluj-Napoca, launched a jointly organised master's programme (accredited in Romania) with instruction provided in Cluj-Napoca. The language of instruction is Hungarian, and the teaching staff comes partly from Pécs and partly from the Babes-Bolyai University.

The Faculty is a member of the European organisations ERA and ELFA. The international relations of most of our academic departments have also become increasingly stronger.

The Department of Criminal Procedure Law initiated the establishment of the Central European Criminal Cooperation, involving about a dozen foreign criminal departments and institutes from Central Europe.

The Faculty has established relations outside Europe as well: upon the initiative of certain departments, several visiting professors from North-American universities have delivered lectures and seminars at the Faculty, and cooperation with Chinese (e.g. the East China University of Political Science and Law) and African (e.g. the Kenyatta University) partners is

The Centre for European Research and Education of the Faculty also has an extensive and active international academic network. The Centre has been (and is) involved in a high number of European Union funded teaching and research projects. The Centre publishes the open access e-journal entitled Pécs Journal of International and European Law.

Interest in learning English has increased considerably and the number of courses offered in foreign languages is also constantly growing. The postgraduate and PhD courses offered at the Faculty of Law enjoy increasing popularity; the PhD-programme is also offered in English as well. The European Documentation Centre and the United Nations Depository Library were established in 1995 originally at the Department of International Law and currently belong to the Law Library of the Regional Library and Knowledge Centre; these collections serve as important sources of information for students, researchers and businesses in the Transdanubian region.

The Law Library in the Regional Library and Knowledge Centre is in general also more than prepared to cater to the needs of foreign students, with a significant collection of journals, books and databases available in English.

The ERASMUS+ programme provides our teachers and students with new possibilities. The number of our Erasmus partner universities and, as a result, the number of those taking part in the mobility programme is increasing year by year, at present the Faculty has 54 Erasmus partner universities all over Europe. It also enables us to welcome students and teachers from abroad as part of this EU-funded academic mobility scheme.

What follows below is an overview of the courses offered in foreign languages at the Faculty of Law.

COURSES OFFERED IN FOREIGN LANGUAGES

AJDINO0101 Languages, Human Rights and Minorities. How to Legislate Linguistic Diversity?

Language of instruction: English

Teaching period (s): Autumn and Spring

Form/method of teaching: seminar

Class hours per week: 2

Credits: 6

1. Linguistic and cultural diversity in the world – past, present and the future; the issue of responsibility
2. Language, linguistic change and the law: language, mind, communication, identity and culture; levels of legislation on language use and diversity
3. National legislation on languages – the principle of territoriality (Switzerland, Belgium, Spain, Finland)
4. National legislation on languages – strong minority language protection (e.g. Austria, Italy, Slovenia, Hungary, the U.K.)
5. National legislation on languages: weak minority language protection (e.g. France, Romania, Greece, Slovakia)
6. International language law in the interwar period – the League of Nations
7. International language law after World War II – the United Nations
8. International minority and language protection in Europe after World War II – the Council of Europe
9. The language question in the European Union – treaty, official and working languages; minority and lesser used languages
10. The language question in the European Union – language rights and the impact of economic and political integration on language use
11. The language question in the European Union – challenges and prospects (globalisation and the European model of globalisation)
12. Legislating linguistic diversity: the question of coherence
13. Legislating linguistic diversity: a new governing principle is needed

The purpose of the course is to discuss some fundamental questions of linguistic legislation on national, international and European Union level. The reason why the issue is urgent and must be taken seriously is that linguistic diversity, like biodiversity, is dramatically decreasing today and the process depends, to some extent, on linguistic legislation, which in turn seems not to be coherent and satisfactory enough. The course intends to present not only the existing linguistic regimes and their weaknesses but a perspective of a more coherent and simpler linguistic legislation which would probably contribute, to a rational degree, to the preservation of linguistic diversity in the world.

AJDINO0201 Information and Communication Technology Law in EU and in Hungary

Language of instruction: English

Teaching period (s): Autumn and Spring

Form/method of teaching: seminar

Class hours per week: 2

Credits: 6

- Basic concepts of Information and Communications Technology (ICT) Law
- The theories and EU strategies of information society
- European regulation of personal data protection – history, context and new challenges
- Copyright issues of software and other online contents – comparison of different types of license agreements
- European framework for the regulation of electronic commerce – legal status of ISPs, consumer protection and other rules

Establishing the information society has become an important political programme of the EU, and so ICT Law has become an emerging field of the EU Law in the past two decades. The aim of the course is to show and discuss the basic ideas and the new challenges of information society, and the EU's strategies to achieve it, Data Protection Law, Copyright Law and E-commerce Law. The course aims at providing a solid basis to understand both the business rationale and the legal structure of these fields.

The course will not only focus on the legal basis but will also cover the practical implications (and possibilities) of the law.

Assessment methods:

Assessing students' performance is continuous in this course as they need to be prepared for every seminar and work with their own data. Lectures are interactive and students have to write a mid-term exam, essay or take part in an oral final exam or do a presentation.

AJDINO0501 Sustainable Production and Consumption in the EU – The Integrated Product Policy

Language of instruction: English

Teaching period (s): Autumn and Spring

Form/method of teaching: seminar

Class hours per week: 2

Credits: 6

1. The concept of sustainable development in international and EU policies. The United Nations Summits, and the European Union strategies on economic growth and sustainable development. The 2030 development agenda and the new Sustainable Development Goals.
2. The principle of integration of environmental requirements into other policies, the role of the IPP in the EU Strategy for Sustainable Development. The aim is to promote a market for greener products that use fewer resources, have lesser impacts and risks to the environment, thus, to improve the competitiveness of the EU industry.
3. Establishment of the IPP at EU level. The integrated product policy approach: the 'life cycle' concept. The EU strategy for sustainable consumption and production and for sustainable industrial policy.
4. Key principles of the IPP approach (life cycle thinking, working with the market, stakeholder involvement, combination of voluntary approaches with mandatory measures, etc.). Further environmental principles to be applied: precaution, substitution, minimisation and producer responsibility.
5. Protection of the ozone layer and the EU policy on climate change.
6. Products from biotechnology, regulation on genetically modified organisms (GMO).
7. The EU chemicals legislation and policy, the new REACH system.
8. The economic and legal framework of the IPP, its tools and means: price mechanism, taxes and subsidies, voluntary agreements, standardisation, green public procurement.
9. Environmental management systems (EMAS), product design obligations (eco-design), environmental labelling (the "European flower").
10. The new concept of extended producer responsibility (an extension of the producer's obligation for environmental impacts of products arising prior to and after the production phase, i.e. responsibility for the choice of raw materials, energy sources, for impacts during the consumption/use phase as well as for impacts of waste generated by products after the end of their useful life-time). Examples of the EU regulation of producer responsibility on special waste streams, e.g., packaging, batteries and accumulators, end-of life vehicles, waste electrical and electronic equipment (WEEE).

The course aims to highlight the importance of international and European efforts for sustainable development, to end poverty, to transform the world to better meet human needs, to change economic growth patterns, while protecting the environment and ensuring peace and realizing human rights.

The aim of the course is to explain the concept of sustainable consumption and production, as an integral part of the 'green economy' and 'circular economy'. The necessary change in the traditional way of environmental policy-making will be discussed: in addition to emission control and waste management, the integrated approach covers all stages from the mining of raw materials to the production, distribution, use, recycling and recovery and final disposal, to reduce the life cycle environmental impacts of products. During the course the main objectives, principles of the IPP strategy, and its key role in the EU sustainable development strategy will be discussed. The existing and newly developed policy tools aiming at the creation of incentives for greener production and consumption patterns, as well as the relevant EU law are to be examined.
